The crime for which Frank Baker was executed was committed on the night of the 1st of August of this year, and was one almost unparalleled in brutality and fiendshness-at least in this section of the State. The scene of the tragedy was an humble home in Sussex county, about two miles from Stony-Creek station, on the Petersburg and Weldon railroad, where lived James Rose, a colored farmer. Some few weeks before James Rose and his wife Maria Rose. whose relations were not what those of a husband and wife should be, had a bitter quarrel, and Rose drove his wife from his house. She carried away with her her little boy, aged about six or seven years-a son by Rose-and took up her residence with Frank Baker, her son by a former husband, only a mile or so distant. Her anger was naturally kindled by the treatment she had Ninth infantry, was shot and slightly received at the hands of her husband, and cook and housekeeper, but really, it was named Henrietta Shands, who had an infaut named Agnes, about eighteen months

On the last day of July or the first day of his absence that the terrible murder at his house was committed. The details as rewere substantially as follows: His story was told with the simplicity of a child, and forward, to the officers and citizens who had the case in hand that there could be no quent developments.
